Use of Credit Information – Private Passenger Auto

The companies listed below indicated the use of credit information for the purpose of underwriting and/or rating private passenger auto insurance. The underwriting process is used to determine whether you receive coverage from an insurer and the rating process is used to determine how much you pay in premiums for that coverage.

(NOTE: some companies use information contained on a consumer's credit report but not a credit score; i.e. company will consider foreclosures, bankruptcy, past due accounts, etc., but do not use a score generated by a credit model.)

This list was last updated September 4, 2008.
