Eight Botox chemodenervation injections with EMG guidance

Decision

It is determined that the eight Botox chemodenervation injections with EMG guidance are medically necessary to treat this patient's condition.

Rationale/Basis for Decision

This patient has tried multiple methods of pain relief including trigger point injections, non-steroidal anti-inflammatory medications, analgesics, antidepressants, physical therapy, spinal cord stimulator trial, and multiple injections. The patient had 80% relief from lumbar trigger point injections. Botox injections for low back pain are a common procedure performed at pain centers throughout the country. Effectiveness has been proven in a randomized, double blind study in people with persistent low back pain. Doses of over 200 units are associated with increased success. Most physicians proceed with 8 injections (240 units) which is common for injection into the low back muscles. EMG location is useful in identifying the proper location of the Botox, which helps to avoid the development of antibodies to the botulism toxin. Therefore, the eight Botox chemodenervation injections with EMG guidance are medically necessary

This decision by the IRO is deemed to be a TWCC decision and order.
