Clinical History

This patient sustained an injury while working as an auto mechanic on ___. He hit his head and fell on his right shoulder causing immediate head, neck, and right shoulder pain. The patient attended therapy and eventually had two cervical epidural steroid injections (ESI), which did not help. In addition, the patient had a steroid/lidocaine injection into the right shoulder which did provide some relief.

Requested Service(s)

Cervical CT scan with reconstruction

Decision

It is determined that the proposed cervical CT scan with reconstruction is medically necessary to treat this patient's condition.

Rationale/Basis for Decision

A high resolution CT scan with reconstruction is a reasonable diagnostic plan. The most recent studies are two years old and the patient's symptoms of cervical radiculopathy still persist. A repeat cervical CT scan is appropriate in this clinical situation. Therefore, it is determined that the proposed cervical CT scan with reconstruction is medically necessary.

This decision by the IRO is deemed to be a TWCC decision and order.
