What happens after DWC gets the DWC Form-045? If DWC approves your request, you will get a letter with the date and time of the BRC. If DWC denies your request, you will get a letter explaining why. You may send the request again with corrections or updated information. You may also request a contested case hearing to appeal the denial.

How soon will a BRC be scheduled? DWC will schedule a BRC within 40 days of getting a complete request. DWC will schedule a BRC within 20 days (expedited) if DWC determines that the BRC needs to happen sooner.

How are BRCs held? BRCs are held virtually, unless good cause is shown for an in-person BRC. After you get notice that a BRC is set, you may file a request with DWC if you think an in-person BRC is needed.

Will DWC provide special accommodations? DWC will provide accommodations to parties who qualify under the Americans with Disabilities Act. Other reasonable accommodations may be provided as needed.

When will a request to reschedule be approved? If you file your request to reschedule within 10 days of receiving notice of the BRC, it will be approved if there have been no other requests to reschedule by either party. For any other request to reschedule, you must explain your reason for the request.

Am I required to be in the BRC? Yes, unless you have good cause. There may be a penalty or fine if you miss a BRC.

What information do I need to share? You must share information about a dispute with the other parties before a BRC. This is called exchanging information. You should exchange only important information (pertinent information). Pertinent information includes any documents, records, or statements that will help you explain your side of the disputed issues. Go to www.tdi.texas.gov/wc/idr/exchange.html to learn more about exchanging information for a BRC.

What are the deadlines for sharing information?

- If you get a BRC request from another party, you have 10 days to send a copy of all your important information to them.
- At least 14 days before the BRC, send DWC a copy of all your important information. At this same time, send copies of any new important information that you have not previously exchanged with the other parties.
- If the BRC is less than 14 days away, you should exchange new important information with DWC and the other parties as you get it.
